<Short bio>

Dr. Laura Skrip is an Assistant Professor with joint appointment at LSHTM and Nagasaki University. She is a quantitative epidemiologist with expertise in mathematical modelling and statistical analysis, as well as the design and conduct of field studies to collect data on health-related behaviour and decision-making during infectious disease outbreaks. She has extensive experience working with national programs, including malaria control, immunization, and nutrition programs, as part of efforts to strengthen local capacity for evidence generation and utilization in post-Ebola Liberia. She has also studied contextual barriers to building and sustaining capacity for advanced analysis, including modelling, to inform development of locally owned programs in West Africa.
